Festivals are not just about fun; they teach children culture, values, joy, and unity.

Celebrating festivals is very important for children because it supports their overall growth and learning in many ways. Festivals help children learn about their culture, traditions, and values, making them feel connected to their roots. By celebrating with friends, family, and community, children learn sharing, caring, and togetherness. Children learn to respect the different culture and religion by celebrating festivals.

Celebrating religious festivals strengthens a community's cultural and spiritual identity by providing a shared experience that reinforces beliefs, fosters unity, and provides an opportunity to express gratitude and connect with others. One of the main religious festivals in our country is Navaratri and playing garba. It symbolizes the victory of good over evil by re-enacting the battle between Goddess Durga and Mahishasura that provides a platform for cultural and social unity. Children of Prep, celebrated and played garba with great fervor, excitement and enthusiasm. Children brought dandiya sticks, and had a lot of fun playing Garba. They also learned dance moves, and the fun of playing Garba with everyone was the best part of the celebration.
